A Voice from the Grave Address to the Chervers, the Chaples the Beechers and Beliveses, of New York. -In the United States Scante, in Febreary, 1839, Heary Clay concluded a speech on the slavery question in the following "words of windom." We have published them before, but they will bear permal a thousand times:

"If one dark spot exists upon our political horizon, is it not obscured by the bright and effulgent, and cheering light that beems around us? Was ever a people before so blessed as we are, if true to ourselves? Did ever any other nation contain within its bosom so many elements of prosperity, of great-ness, and of glory? Our only real danger lies ahead, conspicuous, elevated and visible. It was clearly discerned at the commencement, and distinctly seen throughout our whole career. Shall we wantonly run upon it, and destroy all the glorious anticipations of the high destiny that awaits us? I beceach the abolitionists, themselves, solemnly to pause in their mad and fatal course. Amid the infinite variety of objects of humanity and benevolence which invite employment of their energies, let them select some one more harmless, that does not threaten to del-

"I call upon that small portion of the hely nature of the divine mission of the founder of our religion, and to profit by his peaceful examples. I entreat have given their countenance to abolition, to remember that they are ever ful sphere, and to reflect that the ink which they shed in subscribing with their fair hands abolition petitions, may prove but the prelude to the shelding of the blood of their brethren. I adjure all the inhabitants of the free States to rebuke and disconntenance, by their opinion and their example, measures which must inevitably lead to the most calamitous consequences. And let us all, as countrymen, as friends, and as brothers, cherish in unfading memory the motto which bore our saccestors inumphantly through ad the trials of the revolution, as, if adhered to, it will conduct their posterity through all that may, in the dispensation of Providence, be reserved for them."

The Legislature passed it over the veto by a two-thirds vote of a quorum. A question having arisen as to the constitutionality of the vote, the majority adjourned to Lawrence, while the minority remained at Lecompton. Both factions claim to be the legal body, and it is apprehended that another series of Legislative difficulties will be created by this disagreement.
